Disgruntled employees, government investigations, lawsuits and the laundry list of other challenges that constantly confront HR practitioners- those problems often can be traced to a repeated pattern of similar mistakes that reoccur time and time again. Hiring the wrong people, not orienting them, not having job descriptions, disregarding your own rules, failing to hold management accountable, making false promises, etc. All form the recipe for a negative and unproductive workplace. This presentation by an experienced HR professional offers examples, showing how the company could have handled situations differently, thus avoiding or minimizing problems and exposures.
